Roaring Diana batters coast with her fury

WILMINGTON, N.C. (UPI)—Hurricane Diana straddled North Carolina's coast like a savage colossus Thursday, hammering it with relentless winds and flooding rains that devastated some beach houses and left hundreds homeless.

At least 45,000 people were without power. Streets were flooded and jammed with storm debris, and officials said property damage was massive—$20 billion alone in the communities of Oak Island, Yaupon Beach and Long Beach.

"We are hurt, and we are hurt bad," said Police Chief Bill Corring at Southport near Cape Fear, where the storm's eye hit ashore with 110 mph winds at 11:00 a.m. EDT.

State Patrol Capt. Robert Barefoot said the town of Long Beach seemed to be the most severely damaged. "It's a total disaster," he said.

There were no immediate reports of casualties, but hundreds of people who ignored warnings and returned to beach houses Wednesday were cut off when Diana slammed into the coast with a fury one policeman said "reached like 100,000 tons of force."

The South of the New Hanover Memorial Hospital in Wilmington, said "We expected a massive onslaught of injured, but there have been only a very few injuries and no deaths."

We are very, very thankful."

But she added: "There are still places that have not been reached yet. They are impassable, and things may change when those places are opened up."

Rescue crews with chainsaws and earth moving equipment were working through hurricane winds Thursday to reach isolated areas, including Southport.

Winds began to subside slightly as the huge storm moved slowly inland, but there was no lull in the bleeding rain.

The National Hurricane Center in Miami said 16 inches of rain fell in 48 hours, and another 16 to 15 inches were expected.

"We are going to have a great deal of damage from flooding," Gov. Jim Hunt said after making a helicopter tour of some of the storm-ravaged coast.

Long lines formed Thursday at gas stations, convenience stores and as many as 100 residents of New Hanover County began opening with the aftermath of the storm.

Wade Prigden of Carolina Power and Light said 50 percent of their customers were without electricity days after the storm's effect. "Our estimate is the earliest power can be fully restored could be late Saturday."

Bill imperils Y federal aid

Reagan Goodrich, a design technology major here, talks with a Financial Aids Office worker. A House vote in favor of The Civil Rights Act of 1984 brought passage of the bill one step closer, possibly endangering the $25 million BYU receives in federal aid each year.

Civil Rights Act passage in Senate would be costly

By LAURA CHILDERS
Senior Reporter

A bill that could negatively affect the financial status of about 10,000 BYU students has passed the House of Representatives and could be brought up for a vote in the Senate before the end of the current legislative session on Oct. 4.

The proposal, cited as The Civil Rights Act of 1984, calls for the revision of three major civil rights acts, including Title VII of the Education Amendments of 1972. It is being considered by the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee.

According to Ford Stevenson, BYU director of financial aid, "The long-range ramifications of this bill could be very serious."

Since BYU receives indirect federal aid in the form of government loans and grants to its students, administrators may be forced to make a choice between opening the institution to federal regulation or refusing to admit students who are receiving federal aid.

Stevenson said BYU students receive about $25 million in federal aid each year. About 6,000 students are given Pell Grants, and approximately 5,000 students have Guaranteed Student Loans.

Administrators have long been concerned about the problems students would have if federal aid ever became inaccessible to them, Stevenson said.

The financial aids office conducted a poll about five years ago to determine how many students would have to leave the university if their federal aid were cut off, he said.

They found that anywhere from 1,700 to 3,500 students would not be able to continue their education at BYU if their federal aid were cut off. Stevenson said neither BYU nor The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, the school's sponsor, is capable of extending $25 million in financial aid to students in place of federal aid.

The alternative would be to establish an outside source of revenue for BYU loans, such as a bank, he said.

The Civil Rights Act of 1964 passed the House on June 21 by a 75-20 vote and was then received in the Senate, where it was read twice and sent to committee.

The bill, which was introduced into the Senate by Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., has more than 60 co-sponsors in the Senate, including Sen. Majority Leader Howard Baker, R-Tenn., Robert Dole, R-Kan., Alan Cranston, D-Calif., Gary Hart, D-Colo., and John Glenn, D-Ohio.

But Stevenson said BYU administrators are not in a "panic mode" because they believe there is a good chance the bill will not pass the Senate in its present form.

South is campaign stage

By UNITED PRESS INTERNATIONAL

The South took center stage in the presidential election race Thursday.

President Reagan campaigned Tuesday, praising the American spirit and country music. Walter Mondale visited Mississippi, accusing Reagan of planning "neo-fascist" and "theatrical" cuts in medical aid for the elderly.

The president and his Democratic challenger led the campaign trail to their respective Vice President George Bush and Rep. Geraldine Ferraro took the day off. Speaking in Nashville, Reagan praised the promise of high-tech industry and the values represented by Grand Old Opry legend Roy Acuff to picture his opponent as unbridled and unbridled opportunistic unable to grasp the nation's inherent good-governance spirit.

"He (Reagan) wanted to cut $30 billion more from Medicare. He was out to destroy the Medicare program," Mondale said.

SLC businessman has years of experience

A Salt Lake City businessman has been named administrative vice president at BYU, President Jeffrey R. Holland announced Thursday.

Dee F. Andersen, who will begin his new duties Oct. 15, is currently executive vice president and treasurer of R.L. Warner Enterprises in Salt Lake City. At BYU his responsibilities will include finance, personnel, information systems, physical facilities and liaison with the governing department of the LDS Church.

Andersen, contacted at his Salt Lake office, said he is "pleased, honored and thrilled at being able to have a part" in the BYU administration. Andersen, who is friends with President Holland and several others in the BYU administration, said "it will be fun and exciting to work with them."

Holland said, "As part of our effort to keep the administration of the university as focused as possible, we are combining the offices of Support Services vice president and Financial Vice president into this new position of administrative vice president."

us," Holland said. "We are extremely pleased he has accepted the appointment. As a professional administrator who has been successful in a number of fields of financial administration and executive management, he is ideally suited for this important new position at BYU."

Andersen was graduated from Utah State University in 1963 with a degree in accounting. "I consider the role of the administrative functions of the university extensive to serve students and faculty. We'll be pleased to assist those groups at the university."

A certified public accountant, Andersen has served as controller and vice president of administrative services at the University of Utah, executive administrator to the LDS Presiding Bishopric, and planning coordinator and assistant to the First Presidency. All of this along with experience in the Church Education System—should help him in his new position with BYU, he said.

Andersen will continue his present job with R.L. Warner Enterprises, where he has worked for 8 months, until he begins at BYU in October.

A resident of Farmington and a native of Brigham City, Andersen also has served as managing director of the LDS Church's computer and communications equipment operations and budget offices with responsibilities for establishing the budget for the LDS Church. He is also on the board of directors for Antelope Language Processing System, Inc., and Rick Warner Ford. He is a former director of Deseret Management Corp., Deseret Trust Co., and has served as board chairman of the Utah Division of the American Cancer Society and as a delegate to the national ACSI board.

Andersen and his wife, Frances Nicholas Andersen, have seven children. "I am a former member of the LDS Young Men's general board and currently serve as a counselor in the presidency of the Farmington Utah North Stake."

Seniors rally on health costs

By UNITED PRESS INTERNATIONAL

Banner-carrying senior citizens—including Geraldine Ferraro's mother and mother-in-law—marched on Reagan-Bush offices across the nation Thursday to demand answers about health-care costs and cuts in health-care programs.

"It's said that the oldest American president presides over the most anti-elderly administration," said David Neven, an aide to Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., at a Washington rally—one of at least 90 held nationwide.

Rallies were scheduled in 37 states by the National Council of Senior Citizens and the Villers Advocacy Association, together representing more than 1.5 million people.

Letters were sent to Democratic presidential candidate Walter Mondale and President Reagan Aug. 27 with five questions about their plans for improving the Medicare and Medicaid program if elected in the fall.

"We wanted to cut $30 billion more from Medicare. He was out to almost destroy the Medicare program," the Democrats said.

"Of all the mean-spirited ways, of all the shameful ways to cut money out of that budget is to go to a senior citizen who is retired now, sick and in the hospital, and say, 'We're figured out a way to save money, we're going to raise your hospital and your medical bills while you're on this hospital bed sheet.'"

National Council of Senior Citizens spokeswoman Lorraine Dracell of Washington said Mondale responded to the questions within a few days, answering them the way we wanted him to.

But Reagan did not respond, although a second letter was sent Sept. 7, the council said. Representatives for the seniors said they hoped the nationwide rallies would provoke a response.

In most cities, Reagan spokesmen did not comment at all. But, when told that Mondale had answered the letter promptly, a Reagan spokesman in St. Paul, Minn., said, "It's much easier for a candidate to respond than for the president to respond."

In Manhattan, Donna Zaccaro, 22, daughter of the Democratic vice presidential candidate, was introduced with her grandmothers—Antonetta Ferraro and Rose Zaccaro—to about 300 demonstrators.

Zaccaro took the seniors to vote for Mondale and her mother and to "please tell your children and your grandchildren to vote."

Proposal nears deadline

Balanced-budget supporters look for support

WASHINGTON (UPI)—Congressional supporters of a constitutional amendment to require a balanced budget mounted last-ditch efforts in both chambers Thursday to force the issue to a vote before adjournment.

The Senate Judiciary Committee voted 11-4 for the amendment, as House supporters scrambled to collect 118 signatures by the end of the day, the deadline for forcing a vote on the issue without action by the House Judiciary Committee.

By Thursday morning, House supporters had collected about 100 signatures on their discharge petition, according to an aide to Rep. Larry Craig, R-Idaho, head of the petition drive.

The current Congress is scheduled to end Oct. 6.

The identical measure would require Congress to adopt a balanced-budget resolution every year — beginning this decade — except in time of war or if three-fifths of both House and Senate voted to approve a deficit. If passed by Congress, the amendment would have to be ratified by 34 states.

Supporters say it is the only way to get federal spending under control. Opponents argue the measure is a political ploy that would do nothing to reduce the huge federal deficits for the next several years and would force massive spending cuts in crucial federal programs.

If supporters reach their goal after the deadline, they could ask House Speaker Thomas O'Neill to waive the House rules and allow a vote — an unlikely prospect since O'Neill is an ardent opponent of the balanced budget amendment.

Following the Senate committee's overwhelming endorsement, Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, the measure's sponsor, said Congress "has an ethical and moral obligation to meet this (debt) head on" by voting on it before the end of the session. He told United Press International, however, there is "not a very good chance" the controversial bill could be approved during the remaining three weeks of Congress. Speaking in support of the balanced budget resolution, Sen. Alan Simpson, R-Wyo., said, "We're going to be sitting here in a morass of political embarrassment" unless Congress acts quickly on the controversial measure.

He referred to the fact that 32 of the necessary 34 states have called for a constitutional convention to write such an amendment, and several other states are moving in that direction.

But the grass roots movement suffered a setback in Michigan when a balanced budget resolution failed by one vote in a state House committee, virtually killing the amendment's chance for approval.

Women squad calms protest

MANILA, Philippines (UPI) — The military's all-women riot squad dispersed 500 women demonstrators near the presidential palace Thursday by flashing peace signs, shaking hands and chanting "peace, peace."

It may have been the most polite government response to a demonstration in memory and ended with the women police waving goodbye to the protesters and inviting them to return again.

Still, Manila Police Chief Maj. Gen. Narciso Cabrera, the officer in charge, was prepared for any break in decorum. Several yards behind the women officers, many 50 men with shields and truncheons. "If they make any trouble, we will tear gas them," Cabrera said.

The demonstrators against the construction of a nuclear power plant was the first ever handled by the female police, formed by the Marcos government and trained in rioting to deal with ever-increasing numbers of women protesters.

The women riot police stood — smiling — face-to-face with 500 women demonstrators, blocking their way across a bridge to the palace of President Ferdinand Marcos.

"Kiss each other, kiss," chanted about 300 onlookers at the women police — some waving riot helmets — blocked the way of the 500 demonstrators.

"Peace, Peace," said the officers, making the sign of peace with their hands. Some officers shook hands with the demonstrators. The demonstrators — nuns, professionals, students — 4 teachers wearing masks of skulls to dramatize the dangers of nuclear fallout — were protesting the construction of a $2.1 billion nuclear plant on Bataan peninsula that is nearing completion.

The women began their protest at the U.S. Embassy along Manila Bay and then marched to Mendocino where they met the police.

They said the nuclear plant was unsafe and threatened the lives of Filipinos. They wanted a brief chat with Marcos, but the riot squad politely turned them down.

"You can come back," one riot officer shouted at the demonstrators headed home after a one-hour rally at the base of Mendocino Bridge.

Federal aid to Y in jeopardy

Business Committee, where the bill is currently being debated. He opposed the bill as it stands today.

According to a spokesman in Hatch's Washington office, the senator feels he has a good chance of preventing the bill from coming to the floor, but failing that, Hatch will filibuster to prevent a Senate vote on it.

Stevenson said BYU administrators expected the worst when the bill passed the House but they are now more optimistic. "The longer Hatch is able to delay the bill, the better chance there is to amend it," he said.

One of the bill's stated purposes is to reverse the recent Supreme Court decision in Grove City vs. Bell by repealing Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972, which bans sex discrimination at colleges that receive federal aid.

The high court's interpretation of the law in the Grove City case said if sex discrimination is practiced in a college program receiving federal aid, that money for that particular program would be cut off, but not funds to the college as a whole.

Title IX revised to give the federal government power to cut off funds to entire institutions should any of its departments be found in violation of federal laws against discrimination on the basis of sex, race, age or handicap.

This could affect not only private educational institutions, but any private sector organization receiving federal money directly or indirectly. Included in this group could be grocery stores that accept food stamps and independent businesses whose owners receive Small Business Administration guaranteed loans.

In a June newsletter of the Labor and Human Resources Committee, Hatch is quoted as saying: "The definition of 'recipient' of federal aid under this bill would seem to be without limits."

"In the grocery store that accepts food stamps considered to be a 'recipient' of indirect federal aid under the bill? Are all of the grocery store's actions thereby subject to review by the federal government?"

'Any whacky crackpot' can demand an inquiry, of finances, O'Neill says

WASHINGTON (UPI) — House Speaker Thomas O'Neill said Thursday the ethics committee decided to investigate Geraldine Ferraro's finances because of a legal loophole that allows "any whacky crackpot in America" to demand such an inquiry. O'Neill, a Democrat, told reporters. "The ethics committee is doing what it has to do. Congressmen Ferraro has been open and honest with the American people and with her colleagues."

The ethics committee voted 12-0 Wednesday to investigate whether the Democratic vice-presidential nominee broke the law by refusing to disclose husband John Zaccaro's assets during her six years in Congress.

Ferraro said she was not surprised at the investigation because the panel was "virtually obligated" to make the inquiry once it was asked to do so.

Maeser Building gets face-lift

New home of Honors Program to be ready by spring

By KEITH TROUT
Senior Reporter

If visitors to the southwest end of campus are surprised at the piles of dirt, the cyclone fences and the noise of jackhammers, there is good reason for the disruption.

Remodeling construction is underway on the Karl G. Maeser Memorial Building, on the southwest wing of campus and west of the Heber J. Grant Building.

The Maeser Building is the oldest on the upper campus — the first building on temple hill.

The remodeling consists of demolition of some walls inside the building so that it can be brought up to safety standards, said Al Nelson, construction manager for BYU. Whenever remodeling is done in old buildings on campus, Nelson said, the building is updated to meet all safety codes.

Work on the building has been underway for about a month, but construction on the project has been going on since last winter. In preparation for remodeling, new central heating and cooling systems were brought in and utilities were upgraded, Nelson said.

Old walls in the structure are being torn down and new ones constructed — with the old ones being "bowed up to protect the building" in case of earthquakes, said Nelson. The only major difference on the exterior will be new, modern windows similar to the ones in the Grant Building.

Once the remodeling is completed (it is scheduled to be done this spring), the remodeled building will be used as the center for the Honors Program, said Ed Haynes, director of space utilization for BYU. The Honors Program is now in the Grant Building.

Haynes said the building is being remodeled to serve as headquarters for the French and German departments, which are now in the Jesse Knight Humanities Building. Since the building has been used for overflow and extra classrooms, but not for one concentrated one, he said.

Remodeling work on the Karl G. Maeser Memorial Building began last winter and is expected to be finished by spring. It is the oldest building on the upper campus.

Ground was broken for the Maeser Building on June 3, 1907, and the building was dedicated May 30, 1912, by then Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints President Joseph F. Smith. It was built at a cost of $115,000.

Once the remodeling is completed, the building will be "more useful and modern," Haynes said. Other improvements will be handicapped access to the vestibules and landscaping on the northeast side.

Maeser was named principal of the Brigham Young Academy on April 21, 1905 — replacing Warren Dusenberry, who had been the school's first principal. Maeser held the position until 1907.

At that time, the academy had 97 students and three teachers. Maeser was named as the first superintendent of the LDS church school system in 1908. He died Feb. 15, 1901.

New touch-tone registration system is ringing music in students' ears

By MICHAEL J. RYAN
Universe Staff Writer

The touch-tone registration system implemented at BYU this fall is considered by many students to be one of the best things BYU has done.

In a recent poll of BYU students, a vast majority had registered by phone and were pleased with the system.

Students said they liked the convenience of immediately knowing their class schedule. Russ Bradshaw, a junior from Provo, was registering in accounting, said, "Knowing right off hand that you're in a class really saves a lot of frustration."

Students also liked the time the new system saves.

Instead of taking hours to fill in spaces on the mail-in registration forms (a process many students said were down their minds and patience), students were able to talk into any touch-tone telephone and obtain classes through the use of a high technology computer.

Other advantages to the system were seen by those students who registered on the last day possible. "I registered on the deadline date, and I was able to get all my classes," said Dave Deglar, a sophomore from Denver majoring in public relations. "It was nice not to depend on mail delivery."

The add-drop process was also greatly improved, according to students. Linda Baur, a junior from Chorr, Calif., majoring in office education, said she particularly liked the system because of the ease of changing classes. She wasn't the only student who felt this way; many of the 30 students polled said they found greater ease in the add-drop telephone system.

Some students had problems in acquiring classes, but said they felt the system had nothing to do with it. Some of the classes were filled before they registered. All students polled felt the system was a vast improvement.

BYU students are the first in the nation to have access to the technological advance in registration. The university tried the computer system on a limited experimental basis last year, according to Douglas Ball, registrar.

The decision was then made to allow all students to use the touch-tone system to register this fall. According to Ball, the results were good.

All students will be able to use the touch-tone registration for winter semester, he said.

Polish sailors meet pope despite consular warning

MONCTON, New Brunswick (UPI) — Pope John Paul II, touring eastern Canada in a driving rainstorm, interrupted his schedule Thursday to meet sailors from his Polish homeland who defied their government to meet the Roman Catholic leader.

He also defended human rights and repeated the church's ban on abortion during an outdoor mass before about 100,000 people.

The pope was being driven to the St. John's, Newfoundland airport for a flight to Moncton when he arrived, he was greeted by a group of sailors from the Polish schooner Gdansk who were tied up to take on supplies.

Gdansk Captain Wlodek Wierzbicki, who had sent word of the ship's presence to the Vatican embassy, said the pope's limousine pulled over to the curb, the window rolled down and John Paul smiled from the back seat and met and hugged him over.

"It was the dream of a lifetime," said Wierzbicki, who headed the pope's welcoming party from the Gdansk Yacht Club in northern Poland. The pope gave Wierzbicki and his 14 crewmen medals.

Wierzbicki said he decked his two eldest sons with St. John's in hopes of seeing the pope despite a warning from Polish consular officials against seeking a meeting with John Paul.

At Moncton, John Paul celebrated an outdoor mass before about 100,000 people and linked the theme of human rights to the church's stand against abortion.

Though the pope did not develop the theme as fully as he has on many occasions in the past, he spoke of human rights as "including the right to life from the moment of conception, the right to one's reputation, the right to development, the right to freedom of conscience."

U.S. needs revolution to overcome corrosion

By NAOMI HORNE
Universe Staff Writer

The U.S. needs a major social revolution to eliminate special interest groups and bring about reconstruction in its political system, Dr. Amruti Eitoni told BYU students Wednesday night in the ELWC Ballroom.

In the 1960s and 70s the country suffered a deterioration that affected family, social, community and moral fiber, Eitoni said.

"The low point of corrosion has been passed," he said. However, special interest groups have kept the political system from recovering, he said.

"It has largely been impossible for members of Congress to raise money for TV commercials and public opinion polls," said Eitoni, referring to congressional campaigns.

He said campaigning congressmen must resort to raising money from special interest groups because they will probably use more than $1 million every two years on a single campaign.

While the interest group cannot actually exchange money for promises from the congressman, there are conditions that permit "inglified bribery."

"Very often today, a law in Washington goes to the highest bidder," Eitoni said. For example, there are no longer any regulations on the selling of used cars.

"There is a very high correlation between the amount of money received from the lobbyist or the lobbyist of car dealers, and the way the vote goes," Eitoni said.

The Immigration Bill has been in Congress for 15 years because so many different interest groups want different things, he said.

Even defense spending for TV commercials, "Money will not stay aside for national interest," Eitoni said. "If you want to get a congressman interested, you better pay him to listen."

The U.S. Tax Code has 11,000 pages, with 98 percent outlining tax exemptions for special interest groups, Eitoni said. With so many exemp-

Dr. Amruti Eitoni told students that the 1960s and 1970s saw the country suffer a deterioration that affected family, social, community and moral fiber. Special interest groups have kept the political system from recovering from this corrosion, he said.

Don't the system stops working.

"There is no magic solution," Eitoni said.

"There is no piece of legislation someone could pass to solve the problem."

The situation requires a major revolution, he said, citing the upheavals surrounding the environment and civil rights laws.

Because congressmen need to raise funds for their campaigns, they cannot be expected to start the movement. "Once we have the movement then we can talk about specific legislation," Eitoni said.

Political parties should also agree to shorter campaign periods. Taxpayers now have the choice on their income tax return to contribute $1 per vote to finance the presidential campaign. They should be able to do the same for congressmen, Eitoni said.

Peres seeks confidence vote on his new unity government

JERUSALEM (UPI) — Prime Minister-designate Shimon Peres Thursday presented to parliament a national unity government including his socialist Labor Party and the right-wing Likud bloc, ending Israel's longest political crisis.

Asking for a vote of confidence, he was sure to receive. Peres immediately launched a new Middle East peace initiative and vowed to rescue the Jewish state from an economic crisis marked by a 400 percent inflation rate.

Peres, who expected the vote of confidence from the Knesset later in the day, appeared in his new peace initiative to Jordan's King Hussein to join Egypt and become the second Arab government to make peace with Israel.

Peres, 61, was replacing Yitzhak Shamir as prime minister under an agreement to form a unity government signed earlier in the day by the leaders of the nation's two main political groups — the Labor Party and the Likud bloc.

Under the agreement, Shamir was named foreign minister but will trade jobs with Peres, his longtime political rival, in 1986.

Seven parties, including four religious factions and representing 97 legislators, joined the unity administration, ensuring ratification of the agreement.

The formation of the bipartisan government ended the longest political crisis in Israel's 35-year history, coming seven weeks after inconclusive elections left neither party with a majority in the 120-member Knesset.

Introducing his new government, Peres promised to bring Israeli troops home from Lebanon while at the same time guaranteeing peace for northern Israel. He set no date for the withdrawal.

Resident assistants required to enroll in psychology class

Good preparation for on-the-job experiences

By JEAN ESPLIN
Senior Reporter

Student resident assistants in BYU dormitories must now enroll in education psychology, although some were not informed of it when hired.

The class, Educational Psychology 546, is a graduate-level counseling class. Students may take it for two or three credits, or they may enroll in it.

Many RAs say they believe it is a good idea.

"I think it was a good idea," said Helman Hall's RA Shantia Felt. "It has already helped me relate to my girls better. The lab experiences that we act out are often like real experiences I have already had with the girls on my floor."

Felt is a sophomore from Las Vegas, Nev., majoring in physical education.

"I love the lab. We talk and learn about how to respond and cope," said Luthaun Derry, an RA in Helman Hall, and a sophomore from Alamosa, N.M., majoring in communications.

Some of the RAs in Deseret Towers who had not been informed previously of the requirement objected when he told the first week of school, saying they felt it was unfair.

Harold Reid, director of student housing, explained the move by saying, "We made the requirement because we want to better prepare the RAs to do their job. They never know what they might face on their floors."

RAs, students who live on each of the floors in the campus dormitories and assist building head residents in dealing with floor residents, may have to deal with serious problems among the students on their floor such as severe depression or at times of actual suicide.

"If we can do anything to help them in their qualifications in performing their jobs, we will," Reid said.

Still, both Felt and Derry said they knew of Deseret Towers RAs who had not been informed of the requirement. "I think all the RAs here in Helman knew about it, but I've talked to some RAs from DT (Deseret Towers) who didn't know anything about it," Derry said. "Some of them were really mad. They said they wouldn't have taken the job if they had known about it. I didn't think it was all that big of a deal, but it was further along the academic career, I would probably have been more upset."

One Deseret Towers RA, who asked not to be identified, said he had no idea he could be required to take the class when he signed his contract.

There are a whole bunch of potential complaints," he said. "There's the question of time, one GPA — after all, it's a graduate level class and a lot of us had never had any psychology — and besides, who is going to pay for the textbooks?"

When he students were first presented with the idea, they were told they could not audit the class even though it was a graduate class, and many of them had never had any psychology before. Later, the requirement was changed so that students who were worried about their GPAs could audit the class, Reid said.

"I have been informed of one girl who has quit moved on to a job more according to her interests," he said.

Reid said he felt there had been a communications breakdown further down the chain of command. "All the RAs were supposed to know about the class when they signed their contracts."

According to Bruce Ashton, manager of Deseret Towers, the head resident was informed of the requirement and instructed to inform the resident assistants they hired.

The minutes of the staff meeting clearly indicate that the head residents were informed that it would be part of the RAs training during Fall semester.

"To my knowledge, the head residents let them know when they hired them. I also told all of those I interviewed when I hired them," Ashton said.

Senate committee vote on genocide postponed

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A vote by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee on a United Nations-sponsored treaty to outlaw genocide was postponed today while Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., negotiated with the administration on the 35-year-old pact.

Helms, saying he supports the basic treaty, wants the committee to set a teaching language clarifying U.S. sovereignty. Administration officials said Wednesday the "undisputed ending" were not needed, but Helms blocked a vote on the treaty, so he could negotiate with the administration.

Chairman Charles Percy, R-Ill., rescheduled the vote for today, but called it off when no agreement had been reached by mid-morning.

Peres said the committee would go ahead with the vote next Wednesday even if Helms and the administration fail to come to terms.

Helms, in a tough re-election battle with North Carolina Gov. James Hunt, is caught between President Reagan, who announced his support for the treaty last week at a Brief British convention, and his conservative supporters who maintain it would infringe on the Constitution.

Krishnas run Utah Valley radio station

By VALERIE STAFFANSON
Senior Reporter

Last May, KHQN, a radio station in Spanish Fork, began operating as a full-time Hare Krishna radio station. In the past, the station broadcasted country and top 40 music.

The new KHQN daily format includes message music, shows on vegetarianism, analysis of contemporary events and travel, drama and Spanish programming.

Chris Warden, who owns KHQN, said he got the idea for the station's format from a radio station in Italy that transmits similar programming 24 hours a day and reaches approximately 15 million people.

Warden is the director of a non-profit corporation called SACK Broadcasting, which owns and operates the station. KHQN broadcasts what it calls "sounds of transcendence" 15 hours a day, seven days a week.

Jay Wagner, the station manager, said, "Our music spans dozens of totally different styles, but the common factor is that there's always a message — a spiritual message."

In addition to the music, the station's format includes programs such as "Eating Healthy and Karma-Free," which promotes vegetarianism. Wagner's wife, Nanda, who also works for the station, said the vegetarian program, which air twice daily, have probably been the station's most popular. The station also features radio dramas based on stories from Indian Vedas literature, reading and live public lectures, and a weekly Spanish program. Wagner said the station also carries news, weather and public service announcements.

Mrs. Wagner said the purpose of the station is to have the listener's consciousness lifted. She said many have heard of the Hare Krishna's but have not had an opportunity to learn what they stand for. The station, along with providing uplifting programming, is concerned with giving people a better understanding of the Krishna movement, she said.

Some Krishnas lead lives of celibacy and shaved heads, while others are married and work in somewhat typical jobs while wearing attire suitable to that profession, she said.

Mrs. Wagner said she wears her Sari (a very chaste form of dress worn by Hare Krishnas) when she frequents Spanish Fork, but her husband only wears his robes in their home. She said they feel if he were to wear this attire in the community, it might be frowned upon.

The Hare Krishnas base their religion on ancient Indian scriptures called Veda.

Live and learn foreign language

By VALERIE STAFFANSON
Universe Staff Writer

An effective way of learning to fluently speak a foreign language is offered each semester by the Humanities Department. The department has organized residence where students are able to live together and practice speaking a language other than English.

Dr. Keith L. Ross, director of the foreign language house program, said there are 16 houses now on campus in which an average of 10 students per house are expected to speak a foreign language at all times.

The students pledge to speak the foreign language of the program whenever they are inside the house, but they can speak English on campus or when they are outside of the house. "There is a total of about 135 students participating in the program at this time," said Ross.

The languages offered are French, Spanish, German, Russian, Chinese, Italian, Japanese, Portuguese and Arabic. Most languages have two language houses — one for women and one for men.

Students living in these language houses are required to take two semesters of the language of their choice before entering the program. In several of the languages, students can earn two credit hours while living in the language house.

Ross said students enrolled in the program make rapid improvement in their language skills. Many students can fluently speak the language of their choice after leaving the program.

The program is a much more effective method of learning than taking a language course, he said. The students in the program work together to learn the language.

"They all have the common interest of learning the language," said Ross. The students also participate in activities corresponding to their language.

Most houses have video equipment that play tapes in the foreign language, said Ross.

Ross said at least one native speaker lives in each house. The native speaker is usually the head resident.

Reinold Scholten, a junior majoring in mechanical engineering, heads one of the German houses. Sebastian, a native of Germany, said the first few days in a language house are a little difficult.

Grasshoppers are a fire hazard sign

When a horde of grasshoppers appears, they may warn of a future fire hazard in Utah Valley.

Milton DeLeve, weed abatement officer for Provo's fire department, said many violations of Provo's Weed and Refuse Abatement Ordinance come in the attention because of complaints about grasshoppers "eating up" gardens.

The weeds that serve as grasshopper feed usually dry out as the season progresses, becoming really flammable for brush fires. The weed season here begins in the middle of May and ends about the end of September, according to DeLeve. His office has dealt with 300 violations of the code this season — many of them twice.

Because 1984 has been an unusually wet year, DeLeve said he anticipated this season's unusually wet growth and potential fire hazard. He said he finds it "frustrating" to know property owners who cleaned up spring grass growth in June are now faced with a second weed crop to control.

This year's grasshoppers feasted on lush weeds, but the vegetation didn't bring the expected fire risk to Provo. DeLeve and rains during the summer kept things greener than normal and subsequently kept the fire hazard low.

DeLeve said, "The cooperation has been fantastic." Property owners with weed problems have needed only a reminder to comply with the ordinance's requirement to keep weeds within four inches of the ground.

Those who refuse to clear their property of excess weeds risk being charged with a $100 administrative fee, court costs and the cost of the city hiring a contractor to clear the site.

Roy Utter, left, and Linda Rogers practice the ancient sport of martial arts with the help of instructor Bob Barrow. Barrow said that besides self-defense, advantages of learning karate are improved fitness, self-esteem, and concentration.

Learning karate does more than help in self-defense

By MARIA FARHA
Universe Staff Writer

While the self-defense skills acquired are a definite advantage to learning karate, there are many additional benefits from the sport.

"Self-defense is often a primary goal in karate, but there's a lot more to it," said Bob Barrow, who has a black belt in karate and teaches the sport in Owen.

Barrow, a former BYU football player, took third place in the Professional Karate World Championships in 1971 and was listed in the "Who's Who in Martial Arts" in 1973.

"A lot of people think learning karate is learning a few tricks that you can just use in the street," said Barrow. "In the Eastern countries, the ultimate in self-development has been martial arts."

While the self-defense skills gained from karate are acquired very quickly, one always has a long way to go in developing oneself as a person physically, mentally, emotionally and, ultimately, spiritually," according to Barrow.

Barrow explained that self-defense quickly becomes priority to the developmental benefits students obtain. Many stay with it far past the time when they've acquired good self-defense capability.

Barrow said he has several housewives and students taking karate here in Utah. Because of the extensive physical and mental benefits of karate, people from all walks of life are participating in the sport. Barrow says his program accepts everybody who wants to take lessons. "My oldest student was 74 years old," said Barrow, "the youngest was 4 years old."

"It makes me feel good to see these lovely people enjoying a sport as much as they would an aerobic class, but having a sport give them capacities and skills that they never thought about before," said Barrow.

According to Barrow, one's physical fitness improves while taking karate because "your body has to be conditioned to the ultimate."

He compared karate skills to those learned in ballet or gymnastics, except "if you make a mistake in karate you could be dead." He stressed said it becomes important to have excellent balance and coordination skills when executing karate moves.

None of the skills to be gained from karate are balance, coordination, timing, speed, poise and the ability to project a strong personality. Barrow believes the sport can help in all areas of life.

"You can't imagine what this can do for a little person." There are children who cannot play school sports, but Barrow said "those kids can go take karate lessons and they're going to learn to become lean, strong, flexible, quick and brave. They're going to develop the skills which make them athletes."

Barrow mentioned a student who was born with a growth defect. His parents knew he would be a very small person and were concerned about his self-image. They enrolled him in karate when he was four years old and he had his black belt by the time he was nine.

When he was 10 he was on the Johnny Carson Show doing karate demonstrations and later went into making commercials. "He has made a tremendous living doing commercials," said Barrow, "and he has the strongest, most positive view of himself." He says he's seen it literally change kids' lives.

Barrow explained that Dr. Treasure Wheeler, a researcher with a Ph.D. in learning disabilities, refers many children with learning problems to karate programs because her research shows the activity helps children's motor control and helps them increase other skills such as math and reading.

Barrow told of a mother who was asked why she enrolled her son in karate lessons. She replied, "Because I want to help him learn how to read." Barrow said the karate discipline helps the children to concentrate while learning.

The self-defense skills gained from karate are numerous, even though that usually becomes secondary as an individual goal, Barrow said. "I want my daughters to take karate," said Barrow, "and I also want every woman who has the opportunity to take it from a good qualified instructor."

Barrow says he knows of women who have been abducted and have not taken karate. Those women had horrible experiences. One was killed. "But out of the women that I've trained that have taken karate, several have been attacked and a very strong one of them has beat the root out of the guy."

Modern-day viking sails the world

NEW YORK (UPI) — A modern-day Leif Ericsson, on a journey around the world, arrived Wednesday in Manhattan with a seven-man crew from Norway in a Viking ship.

Ragnar Thorsell, 37, of Norway, in his attempt to duplicate Ericsson's ancient voyage, had already put in at the Faroe Islands, Iceland, Greenland, Halifax and Boston.

His Viking boat docked at the South Street Seaport for a week's inspection by the public before it sails up the Hudson to the Great Lakes, down the Mississippi River and onward to complete a voyage around the world.

The ship was designed from a wreck discovered on Greenland. About the year 1000, legend has it, the Ericsson's Vikings explored the shores of America after his and his crew sailed from Scandinavia in 50-foot wooden boats. He called the new land Vinland, for the grapes he found.

Thorsell's ship, named Sara Siglar, or Sailor of the Sagas, sailed from the west coast of Norway June 17.

Prisoner offers organ for parole

BY UNITED PRESS INTERNATIONAL — James Chaney, an inmate of the state penitentiary in Walla Walla, Wash., has come up with a unique suggestion for repaying his debt to society. He wants to donate a kidney in exchange for his freedom — five years ahead of his 1988 parole date for a gas station robbery.

Chaney, 30, who earlier landed without success to sell a kidney for $10,000, says prisoners make perfect organ donors. "You know, I don't think you'd find a healthier bunch of people than you've got here in prison. You have to stay healthy to protect yourself."

The state parole board says Chaney said Chaney's offer might be considered as "sane."

Skyroom to present 'dining experience'

By MARY ALICE SALMON
Lifestyle Editor

Members of the BYU and Provo communities will have a new place to dine on Friday nights.

The ELMO Skyroom will be inaugurating its new "Dine by Sunset" service tonight, offering what organizers refer to as "an evening's experience in dining."

When asked how the idea to create a fine dining experience at BYU got started, Verna Ashby, assistant director of BYU Food Services, said, "We constantly have people ask, 'Where's a really nice place to go to eat on campus?'"

Ashby, a long-time food service employee who has recently become director of Williamson Center Food Services, remembered that years ago there was a Friday night dinner by reservation only in the Skyroom. The place was filled every Friday.

"I just brought an old idea back with me when I came to the Williamson Center," he said.

The Friday night idea had been dropped when the student body asked to have that night open for Skyroom dining.

"Dances have dropped off a lot since then — especially the small ones, and so we decided to try this," Ashby said.

What is this "dining" Ashby calls it "an experience in dining."

"It's an evening's experience — not just

"We've had people ask, 'Isn't your price too high?' and I'd say yes, if you want hamburgers and root beer."

a run in and run out type of thing," he said. "I expect many people to spend 1½ to 2 hours there."

But those who do not want to spend a lot of time at dinner will be accommodated, too. "Service is the word," according to Ashby. Anything the customer wants, within the Skyroom staff's power, will be supplied.

The service will begin as diners are greeted at the door by hostess Lynn Hansen.

A seasonal appetizer will be served as diners sit down, and the waiter or waitress will direct customers to the "second course table," which will feature a smorgasbord of smoked oysters, crab legs, shrimp, fruit and other items. These items will be available throughout the evening, and customers will be encouraged to go back as many times as they wish.

"There will be no need for diners to keep their plates as they would at a buffet," Ashby pointed out.

The entire will be served next from a limited menu, which will include New York cut steak and prime rib as regular items. Variable items will include different types of poultry, like cornish game hen, fish and seasonal items such as leg of lamb.

Non-alcoholic specialty drinks will be served with dinner, and dessert will include a chocolate cake or non-chocolate dish or ice cream to choose from.

Ashby says the single price per person for the entire meal is competitive with the prices in other fine dining establishments in the area. "We've had people ask, 'Isn't your price too high?' and I'd say yes, if you want hamburgers and root beer."

"For the service and for what's served, you'll find it (the price) is reasonable," he said.

In reference to the service Ashby said, "I like to say that if President Reagan were here, the Skyroom is a place you could take him, and we wouldn't do anything any differently than we do."

Organizers hope the fine table settings, dinner music, and — if the weather cooperates — the sunsets during dinner will contribute to the atmosphere.

Food Services Director Dan Brooks said, "It will be a nice place to hold hands and look at the stars. He hopes BYU students who have no transportation to other Provo restaurants will find the Skyroom convenient."

Soprano Lois Johnson to present faculty recital

Soprano Lois Johnson will present a faculty recital tonight at 8 in the Modern Recital Hall, HPAC.

Johnson, a vocal instructor in the music department, has taught at BYU since 1972 and holds both a bachelor's and a master's degree from BYU.

Johnson has performed as soloist in such operas as "War Requiem," "Elijah" and "Messiah." She has also appeared in several BYU Opera productions.

As a member of the Mormon Tabernacle Choir, Johnson has performed in more than 12 years, Johnson has often soloed in concerts and broadcasts.

In addition to her vocal work, Johnson is currently director of the Utah Valley Choral Society and has this past summer worked with Promised Valley Playhouse productions "Shenandoah," and "Promised Valley."

Her recital tonight will include three arias by Handel, "Zigemonster" by Brahms, a set of eight Gypsy love songs, Schubert's "La Morte" and Samuel Barber's "Himn Song."

The text for "Hemst Songs" was taken from sales, thoughts and poems written as the merriment of old Irish manuscripts by monks and priests as they translated Latin texts and reflected on their simple lives.

The recital is free.

Learning the values of others can reduce misconceptions

PAGE, Aris (UPI) — Jim Kindred calls it "preventive medicine" and his prescription is a simple one: learn the other fellow's values.

Kindred, a former Mormon missionary to the Navajos, runs a three-day cross cultural awareness program for employees of Salt River Project's Navajo Generating Station.

Both author and instructor of the program, Kindred is trying to break down cultural barriers that hinder communication by teaching each of the nearly 800 station employees to identify and discard misconceptions about fellow workers.

Kindred, a former instructor at BYU, uses diascapes, workbooks and videotapes to show how attitudes, values and beliefs are shaped by such influences as family, friends, religion, the electronic media, school, geography and economy.

Understanding how one's values were formed helps a person understand and accept another's values, he says.

"If you really want to communicate with others, you have to understand their values," Kindred says, saying his goal is two-fold: increase understanding of self and broaden awareness of others' values.

"Everyone has been taught 'proper attitudes and values by their society," he says. "Deviation from what the culture recognizes as appropriate behavior or values can be a source of conflict between people."

"When you understand others' values, you can understand their behavior," he says. "Behavior is always linked to the behavior."

The rationale for such a program becomes evident when traditional Anglo and Navajo values are compared. In many instances, their values are in direct contrast.

"Anglos view the world as something to act upon or to be acted upon," he says. "Aggressiveness often is socially accepted and encouraged."

"Navajos tend to be passive by Anglo standards. Rather than seeking control over their environment, they seek harmony, security and balance."

Another example of value differences concerns perceptions about work.

"The traditional work ethic is part of Anglo culture," Kindred says. "Anglos are taught to work hard, get ahead and plan for their future."

But he says Navajos are motivated in a different way.

"Traditional Navajos view work as a means to satisfy their needs. Those who accumulate more than they need might be perceived as selfish and wasteful by their peers."

"In traditional circles, Navajos are taught to share all they have. He considered unwise to place money in a bank because it cannot do anyone any good while it's there."

Consequently, he says, Navajos often are viewed as unsuccessful by Anglos, for whom wealth and social status play an important part in the measurement of success.

The blond-haired, blue-eyed father of five was introduced to the Navajo lifestyle in 1966 when he began his mission on the Navajo Reservation. Kindred lived in a hogan, learned the Navajo language and became involved in a number of social programs for the Navajos.

Later, he taught cross-cultural Navajo at BYU, Utah State, College of Eastern Utah and Northern Arizona University. He has a bachelor of science degree in political science from BYU and has done graduate work in educational psychology.

Computers make beautiful music

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — Businessmen use them. Scientists use them. Even reporters use them. Now, musicians are getting into the work with computers.

Rickey Hart, drummer for the Grateful Dead, is hard at work writing computer programs for use in future recordings and concert tours by the band.

Hart got into computers when he and Dead bassist Phil Lesh began writing "The Song of Hagar," a book about the history of percussion instruments. Hart uses a Hewlett-Packard portable computer to work on his manuscript, and to compose song lyrics, while traveling 200 days out of the year with the band.

The drummer also has been doing some work on computers and music at the Center for Computer Research Music and Acoustics (CCRAM) at Stanford University, where he is using a mainframe computer to discover new ways of modifying the band's sound.

"Reverberation filters and all kinds of signal processing, that's what the start is," Hart said in a telephone interview from the center.

Cleaver sound and new special effects are some of the most interesting possibilities Hart explored, but Hart stopped short of revealing just what the Grateful Dead plans are for implementing computer-aided music in the center.

"The more familiar we become with the computers, the more use we'll find to make them a part of our orchestra," he said. "They're experimental things, we're just not ready for prime time release of this stuff. The main thing I cannot talk to you about. They're not only palatable, but top secret in the Grateful Dead circle of secrecy."

Hart said some of the computer innovations that he is working on could show up in the band's music within a few months.

"Sound, like water, moves in waves," he said. "The computer lets you specify and shape a sound wave, so theoretically you can create any sound in your imagination. Once we've developed programs for it, the portable (computer) will be another instrument in our orchestra."

The nine-pound computer that Hart uses can store commands to control tape-to-tape use to bend, shape and fine-tune the sound the hand produces. Such high-tech controls are in general use in recording studios, but the studio machinery is so bulky and too sensitive to be hauled around from concert to concert.

Computer programs fed into the portable use can be used to control special effects such as reverb, echo and tone distortion, effects that otherwise would have to be manually controlled by the musicians or support personnel.

"Using the computer, you can get more control over it," said Marie Giarandino, a Hewlett-Packard representative who worked with the band members. "This way you can get the same sound every night, the type of sound you put in the studio, because it is programmed into the computer."

FLICK FLACK

DREAMSCAPE (PG-13) — A science fiction adventure-thriller that transports filmmakers into the world of outer space. The film stars Dennis Quaid, who recently appeared in "The Right Stuff." Quaid portrays a young man with psychic powers who learns how to enter and participate in other people's dreams, only to have himself thrust into a fantastic dual in a world where literally anything can happen.

Max von Sydow plays Dr. Paul Norvinsky who assists Quaid. Norvinsky's work is of special interest to the President of the United States, who has plans for the startling discovery. Violence, profanity, sex.

SHOOTING STARS (PG) — A hysterical comedy about parapsychologists who go into the spirit elimination business. Creative director and a few members of the cast are Bill Murray and Dan Aykroyd. Violence, profanity, vulgarity.

INDIANA JONES AND THE TEMPLE OF DOOM (PG) — Incredibly entertaining and packed with action and suspense. As exciting as "Raiders of the Lost Ark." Action is before the "Raiders" even begins. Starring Harrison Ford with a new cast. Violence, profanity.

A FIELD OF WHITE (G) — A Mexican movie featuring the music of Los Angeles and David Byrne. Los Angeles is best known for its music in "Saturday Night Fever" and "My Turn on Earth."

THE KARATE KID (PG) — Excellent. The title is misleading, and the story is much better than the one that came from the movie. The plot revolves around a teenager who moves into a new area and the problems he encounters. Almost a "Rocky"-type movie.

RED DAWN (PG-13) — A startling and provocative adventure about eight young Americans whose lives are changed forever when the nation's heartland is invaded and occupied by foreign troops. Profanity, violence.

SAM'S SON (PG) — The semi-autobiographical portrayal of Michael Landi's youth. Timothy Murphy plays Eugene Orestis (Landi's real name) during his senior year in high school as a rebellious, juvenile. Profanity.

THE PHILADELPHIA EXPERIMENT (PG) — Inspired World War II, a U.S. Navy scientist conducts an experiment about invisible to enemy radar backfires, sending the ship into a time vortex. Two men find themselves trapped in the 1960s. Forty years later the results of the experiment is threatening the safety of the world. Violence, profanity.

THE WOMAN IN RED (PG-13) — The story of a married man, Gene Wilder, who never looked to live at another woman until he met the woman dressed in red, Kelly LeBrock. Observed with the woman. Wilder did anything to go out with her. Sex.

Miss America winner may keep title even if nude photos are published

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (UPI) — Even if Penthouse magazine publishes nude pictures of the winner of this year's Miss America Pageant, she may be allowed to serve her reign, pageant chairman Albert Marks Jr. said Thursday.

Marks asked Vanessa Williams to give up her Miss America 1984 crown last July because she posed nude for pictures that later appeared in Penthouse.

But Marks challenged Penthouse publisher Bob Guccione to prove he has nude photographs of one of this year's contestants, which the magazine plans to print if she wins.

"I do not believe he has it and if he has it, I'm calling his bluff here and now," Marks told a news conference.

Even if the photographs exist, however, Marks said he would not "necessarily" force the winner to step down.

"I can say to you that a nude pose for art and art's sake, which I don't think would be the kind Guccione would have, would be reviewed in the light in which the pictures were taken," he explained.

Including Williams to relinquish her title, Marks stressed the "hard core" nature of the photographs, which featured Williams in a variety of sexually explicit poses with another woman.

Marks, calling Guccione a "tease" seeking publicity at the pageant's expense, said that he hoped any contestant who has posed nude would inform him.

But the pageant chairman again refused to question the winner.

Guccione's announcement was the focus of much discussion throughout Conventions Hall, where the 61 pageant contestants were preparing Thursday for a second night of preliminary competition in talent, swimsuit and evening gown events.

The results are used to cut the field to 10 finalists who will compete for the Miss America 1985 title during nationally televised coronation Saturday night.

Both Miss Massachusetts, Margaret Hays O'Brien, who has a Wednesday night's talent event, and Miss Texas, Tamara Fiest, who captured the first swimsuit pose, denied they ever posed nude.

STAR TREK III: IN SEARCH OF SPOCK (PG) — Dean Cain (William Shatner) takes an illegal journey back to the ill-fated Genesis planet. Lots of inside jokes for Trekies and a solid story, well told. Violence, profanity.

CLOAK AND DAGGER (PG) — A young boy witnesses a murder, but no one believes him, except the killers, of course. Great chase film with humor, excitement. Violence, profanity.

OXFORD BOYS (PG-13) — Rob Lowe is a brash, domineering Las Vegas college student who arrives at Oxford to win the rich and alluring Lady Victoria. This loose remake of "A Yank at Oxford" is loaded with problems, chiefly its lead character being completely unsympathetic. Sex, profanity.

THE NIGHT OF THE SHOOTING STARS (PG) — An Italian film about a woman's wish to tell her child the story of her Tuscan village during World War II, and of the village's escape from Fascism during the war's final days. Directors Paolo and Vittorio Taviani create a stunning tale of the Resistance and a professor at the University of Munich who, between June 1942 and February 1943, crossed the line between conformity and resistance and was caught by the Gestapo. In German with English subtitles.

LA PASSANTE — Starring Romy Schneider. Produced by Academy Award winner Raymond Dancow, "La Passante" was the late Romy Schneider's last film before her untimely death at age 44 in 1980. In the film Schneider plays a dual role: the wife of a present day political activist and the wife of an anti-fascist newspaper editor in Berlin in the 1930s. It is as this character, Schneider saves a 12-year-old Jewish boy from the Nazis, brings him to Paris and raises him as her own child. The story tells of her efforts to remain hopeful while the world around her crumbles and dares her touching relationship with the young boy. In French with English subtitles.

GREYSTOKE (PG) — The story of Tarzan, the ape man. An infant is born in the jungle and soon orphaned. He is adopted by a group of apes, with whom he becomes closely associated. Researchers discover the young man is really the Lord of Greystoke and take him back to civilization. The story of a man who is torn between two worlds.

BREAKIN' (PG) — OK, broadcasting/standardizing movie about a young woman who discovers street dancers are just as hardworking as those who train in dance. Nominal "Rocky" plot is mediocre, as is acting and dialogue. Profanity.

Y-gridders brace for Hurricane

No. 6 Cougars face a tough Tulsa team

By DAVE LEWIS
Senior Reporter

BYU's No. 6 ranking and the nation's longest winning streak will be on the line Saturday when Tulsa comes to town for the first encounter between the two schools since 1971.

Tulsa's head football coach is concerned about the weather in From this weekend. He wouldn't mind a rainstorm to slow down BYU's passing attack.

"I was hoping that a hurricane would land out there about the time we get there," said coach John Cooper.

Even though Hurricane Hanna isn't scheduled to make an appearance in From, the Tulsa Golden Hurricane will blow into Cougar Stadium on Saturday.

BYU and Tulsa may not have met in 13 years, but Hurricane coach John Cooper has nothing but respect for the Cougars.

"We've played against Oklahoma, Oklahoma State, Arizona, Georgia and Florida," Cooper said. "BYU is the best team overall we've played against."

The Golden Hurricane, a member of the Missouri Valley Conference, is coming off a 28-10 victory over Southern Illinois on Sept. 1. Tulsa had its last week. The only previous meeting between the two teams was in Tulsa, the Cougars coming away with a 25-17 win.

Both teams came into the contest as the "team to beat" within their respective conferences. Tulsa has won the Missouri Valley Conference championship for the last four years while the Cougars are looking for their ninth consecutive WAC crown.

The strongest and most widely published aspect of the Hurricane team is the defense. The Oklahoma media labeled the Tulsa secondary the "Pawsooters" for leading the squad to a 1983 ranking of second in the nation in interceptions and takeaways.

Cooper downplayed the strength of his pass defense. "We only intercepted one pass in the Illinois State game," he said.

Tulsa is returning six starters on defense. Among them will be the team's leading interceptor last year, two safety Nate Harris.

Also returning for Tulsa will be most of last year's defensive line, anchored by 250-pound Brian Jones and 260-pound Kevin Lilly.

While avoiding praise for his own team by saying his squad is "out on both sides of the ball," Cooper was obviously impressed with BYU's two previous outings.

"We haven't played anybody who can throw the ball like BYU," he said. "We've used to people running the ball to our part of the country."

Hurricane quarterback Steve Gage may pose some problems for BYU's defense. Gage was voted last year's conference newsmen of the year as a freshman. In the Hurricane's Sept. 1 win, Gage looked impressive, completing 10 of 17 passes for 157 yards including a 75-yard touchdown to Ronnie Keller.

Another strength of the Hurricane will come from its versatile running game, spearheaded by junior running back Gordon Brown and Bobby Bosker.

Brown, a 5-foot-11, 205-pound junior college transfer, was instrumental in the Hurricane's first victory of the season, gaining 112 yards on 13 carries for an 8.6 yard average.

BYU head coach LaVell Edwards said the Cougars always find it difficult to prepare for the kind of offense Tulsa operates.

"It's tough to emulate their speed. A lot of their offense is done off of play action," Edwards said. He also called Tulsa "a very underrated, well-coached, excellent team."

The Cougars should be in top form following their 47-13 thumping of Baylor last week. The only question mark from last Saturday's contest is the kicking game. Edwards referred to the blocked kicks and poor punt returns as "things we are going to have to get squared away."

The punting game, however, looked particularly good with harp-fort Lee Johnson averaging 58.7 yards on seven punts, the longest being a 65-yard boot.

Cougar center Tevon Matish sprained his ankle against Baylor, but should be back in the lineup for the Tulsa game.

The Hurricane coaches are very deliberate in their praise of BYU's defensive coordinator Bill Young said: "It's going to take a lot of praise on our part to beat BYU. We've got to be objective in our thoughts, and we must understand that they will add up the yards and score some points, but we can't lose our edge."

Tulsa's head coach is also one of the many this year who see BYU's defense as the team's strongest facet.

"They're defense scares me. Everybody knows they can score points, but who would have expected that?" he said. "I don't see any weaknesses on either side of the line.

Along with their No. 6 national ranking, the Cougars also own the longest winning streak in the nation at 15. Miami's loss to Michigan last week made BYU's win streak No. 1.

Tulsa is riding a seven-game winning streak of its own. The Golden Hurricane also possesses the longest longest home win streak, with 16 consecutive victories in Hasty Stadium.

The contest will be BYU's last non-conference contest before opening up to WAC schedule next week at San Diego State.

Last year both BYU and Tulsa played San Diego State, with the Golden Hurricane defeating the Aztecs 24-7 and the Cougars coming out on top of a 47-12 score. Tulsa under Cooper brings into the game a 2-1 record against WAC schools.

The last meeting between the two schools, back in 1971, took place on a rainy, cold October afternoon. During the game, the Cougars' defense came up with five interceptions, one returned for a touchdown, in BYU's 20-17 win.

Tulsa is in a position strongly reminiscent of BYU five years ago. The Hurricane is a four-time defending champion, the 19th winningest team in 14 football years over the last five years, and one of the least respected champions in the nation.

You can bet Tulsa will be looking for both respect and recognition Saturday.

Haysbert's speed, skill add extra dimension

By DOUG FOX
Senior Reporter

As the clock wound down to 1:37 in the fourth quarter the Cougars were faced with an crucial third-and-long play from the 50-yard line. Time was running out in one of BYU's biggest games ever, against the No. 3-ranked Pittsburgh Panthers.

As the huddle broke, the primary target was wide receiver Glen Kozlowski. But as the play developed, it was Adam Haysbert who broke free of his man around the 25-yard line.

Haysbert turned, caught the ball over his left shoulder and raced into the end zone — giving the Cougars the margin of victory over the powerful Panthers.

It's a play that vaulted the Cougars to a 20-14 win and into the No. 12 spot in the Top 20. Not only is it a play most BYU fans will remember for a long time, but one Haysbert will always treasure.

"I was on national TV, my family saw me, my friends back home saw me — it was like a dream," he said.

Haysbert, a senior majoring in telecommunications, was named the Western Athletic Conference offensive player of the week for his performance in the Pittsburgh game, after grabbing nine passes for 141 yards.

Staggeringly enough, Haysbert wasn't the primary receiver on the 50-yard bomb. "I was doing a clearing route for Glen Kozlowski," he said.

Haysbert said the Cougars had run the play a few times earlier in the game, and he noticed that his defender had been cheating up — leaving him open deep.

When the play was sent in again, he mentioned to Benson to watch deep. But in the connection of the huddle break-up, he wasn't sure if Benson had even heard him.

He ran the pattern as usual and saw the ball coming as he turned around. "When I caught the ball I knew there was no way he would catch it," Haysbert said.

Although he's known for his speed, Haysbert hasn't always played wide receiver. After playing the position one freshman year at San Mateo High School in California, his coach moved him to running back to better utilize his quickness.

Haysbert performed well enough to be selected as prep All-American but missed playing his favorite position.

"That's my forte. I've always liked it since I was a little playing in the streets," he said. "I really didn't want to be a running back."

Haysbert was recruited by many schools, including UCLA, Oregon State and Utah, but opted for BYU because of the interest shown in him by former offensive coordinator Doug Lora. Recruiters often are the recipients of the hardest-fighting tackles known to the sport.

When the ball is in the air a receiver can't take the time to watch out for defenders, his eyes must not leave the ball. According to Haysbert the "cardinal sin" of a receiver is to worry about getting hit.

"You just don't worry about people around you," he said. "It's better to get hit and catch the ball than get hit and drop the ball."

Thursday, and on Friday the plays are once again walked through, this time at the stadium, so as to help the players mentally prepare for the game.

Haysbert said the team learned of their No. 6 ranking during a meeting Monday afternoon. "Everybody was really excited," he said. "I always wanted to be a part of a nationally-ranked team that people could look up to and say, 'These guys are bad.'"

— Adam Haysbert

"It's been an adjustment," he said. "It can be fun, you just have to work a little harder. You have to do different things for fun."

Haysbert came to BYU in 1980 and played with the jayvees squad. He rejoined the jayvees in 1982 after redshirting in 1981. In 1983 he worked into the varsity, receiving recognition after an injury to senior Mike Eddo.

Haysbert caught touchdowns passes against Bowling Green, New Mexico and Utah State — the catch against Utah State culminating a crucial drive late in the game.

According to Haysbert, it takes more than just physical talent to be a good receiver. It takes practice and concentration.

In preparing for an upcoming game, receivers have a busy practice schedule. Mondays are spent walking through pass patterns. On Tuesday, they study game films of the opponent's defense.

Wednesday brings workouts on the patterns and any new play to be used in that week's game. The patterns are "ironed out" and "fine tuned" on

For Utah, successful season means conquering Cougars

Editor's note: This is the last of eight previews of Western Athletic Conference football teams. By SCOTT O. MENCE Sports Editor

SALT LAKE CITY—For a football team at the University of Utah to be successful, they only have to win one game a season. Of course, that one game is the biggest one of all — the contest against the BYU Cougars.

"That's what they say here," said Utah coach Chuck Stobaert. "It's not a successful season if you don't beat BYU."

Unfortunately for the Utes, they haven't had many successful seasons lately. In the last twelve years, Utah has only beaten its neighbor to the south once — a 23-22 decision in 1978.

To put the Cougars' recent dominance in perspective, before 1978 the series was extraordinarily lopsided in the Utes favor. In the first 41 games of the rivalry, Utah won 38 and lost only five, with four ties. BYU managed three ties in the early years, but couldn't pull out a win over Utah until the 18th meeting, in 1942.

Stobaert thought he was on the right track after his first season as Utah's head coach. In 1982 the Utes beat BYU in all the statistics except the final score, losing to the Holiday Bowl-bound Cougars 17-12.

But last year's game was more reminiscent of the recent BYU-Utah games. The Utes could do no right and the Cougars could do no wrong. The final score was 55-7 in BYU's favor.

With that in mind, Stobaert has gone about trying to build a team that will no longer have to play second fiddle in the Beehive State. The Utah coach could talk all day about his 1984 squad.

The player Stobaert likes to talk about the most is senior quarterback Mark Stevens (5-11, 185).

"I wouldn't care where I was coach, I'd want that's the quarterback I'd want," he said. "I don't know if there's a better quarterback in the conference."

Stevens finished 12th in the nation in total offense last season, averaging 229.1 yards per game. He passed for 12 touchdowns and ran for another 10.

"He's a much better quarterback than he was a year ago," Stobaert said. "He's probably a better passer than runner, but he can run."

While Mark Stevens will be leading the offense, another Mark will be leading the defense — Mark Bloch.

Bloch (5-10, 225) is a two-year starter who led the Utes in tackles last season with 182. The senior was named to the All-WAC second team last two seasons.

"He's the leader of our defense," Stobaert said. "We're counting on him to be out of the blocks fast."

Unfortunately for the Utes, Bloch was injured in the game against Washington State last week and may not play Saturday at Teton.

Joining Stevens in the backfield is diminutive junior tailback Eddie Lewis (5-7, 160). "He's the leader of the pack for us," Stobaert said.

Stevens will have senior wide receiver Duane Hays to throw to. Hays caught 41 passes for 623 yards and five touchdowns in 1980.

"He'll make a great play — maybe more than one — in each game," Stobaert said. "He'll find a way to come down with the ball."

BYU's Brad Smith brings down Utah quarterback Mark Stevens in last year's 55-7 Cougar victory. The Utes hope to end BYU's recent dominance of the series.

Stobaert expects two of his offensive linemen to be standouts — sophomore Inaoka Pelt (6-3, 260) and senior Carlton Walker (6-2, 272).

"Carlton's worked very hard," Stobaert said. "I think he's read something about the big salaries in the NFL."

Even Stobaert was willing to admit that all was not well with his Utes. He said the wide receivers have no experience and were "running the wrong patterns."

The two tight ends Stobaert was counting on were both injured in spring practice. "That's our Achilles heel," he said.

The Utes have proven they can score points in their first two games, running up 82 points against Weber State and 40 against Washington State. But the big question is the Ute defense.

"Defenses will always keep you in a game," Stobaert said. "In the conference, if you don't have a defense it's like watching a tennis match."

He should know all about that type of game. Despite Utah's 40 points against Washington State, they were outgained by two.

But there's always the BYU game to make the season.

Reborn Giants face 'Skins in battle for respectability

By UNITED PRESS INTERNATIONAL

Frank Gifford was writhing past defenders.

Suddenly the New York Giants are a recognized National Football League power. A team's 2-0 record doesn't usually portend an earth-shattering season, but in the Giants' case the victory total is only one short of New York's entire winning output last year. And the club's biggest cheerleader is vice president Tim Mara.

"Hey! Everywhere you go, people are talking about us. They want to know if our record is for real," Mara said.

Last Sunday's 23-7 surprise win over Dallas triggered thoughts of previous Giants powerhouse when Y.A. Tittle manned the firing ramparts and Washington lost its first two games to stand at the bottom of the NFC's eastern division, and coach Joe Gibbs admits the team is struggling.

Lucas plans to stay as guard in San Antonio

SAN ANTONIO (UPI)—The San Antonio Spurs have matched the contract offer short tendered by the Houston Rockets for veteran guard John Lucas.

Spurs general manager Bob Bass said Lucas now has a binding contract to play the 1984-85 NBA season in San Antonio. Lucas' contract with the Spurs is a reported $200,000 a year for three years.

Bass said the decision to keep Lucas make the Spurs appear "guaranteed" but that Lucas will provide intense competition and good depth for the team.

A Tradition Over a Quarter Century

Editors predict another Y win

Week No. 3 gets underway

By SCOTT O. PIERCE and TROY STEINER
Sports Editors

Week No. 3 of the college football season gets underway Saturday with several big games on tap. No. 19 Auburn is at No. 3 Texas, No. 16 Washington is at No. 2 Michigan, No. 12 Penn State is at No. 8 Iowa and No. 12 Oklahoma is at Pitt.

Closer to home, BYU puts its No. 6 ranking on the line against the Tulsa Golden Hurricane, who are coming to town looking for both respect and an upset. Three WAC games are scheduled: Air Force at Wyoming, TCU at San Diego State and Hawaii at Colorado State.

Tulsa at BYU: The Cougars have come up with two surprising wins in two games, the first a victory over highly-louted Pittsburgh and the second a surprisingly easy blowout of Baylor. The Golden Hurricane shouldn't be underrated, but the Cougars should keep rolling along. They picka BYU by 21, Scott by 26.

Auburn at Texas: Texas hasn't played a game yet, while Auburn opened with a loss to Miami. This game is in the Lone Star State, so the Longhorns should begin with a win. They take Texas by 15, Scott forecasts a seven-point Longhorn win.

Washington at Michigan: The Wolverines are coming on a big upset over then-No. 1 Miami that pushed them to No. 2 in the rankings. More than 100,000 rabid fans will be in the Arbor cheering Michigan on. Both Troy and Scott pick Michigan by six.

Penn State at Iowa: The Hawkeyes destroyed intrastate rival Iowa State last week. Iowa State isn't the toughest of opponents, but then Penn State struggled with heavy Rutgers. They pick Iowa by 18, Scott forecasts a margin to seven.

Oklahoma at Pittsburgh: The Panthers aren't in a happy mood, having lost their opener to BYU. Oklahoma, on the other hand, is still Oklahoma — but the glory years of the 1970s are fading from memory. This game should be close. They go with the Sooners by three, Scott picks Fifty by one.

Air Force at Wyoming: The Falcons have a reputation of being a first two games, but not against particularly strong teams. Wyoming has played one strong team, and the Polar got blown out 42-7 by No. 1 Nebraska. This is an important game for both teams. They have a shot at the WAC title, a win is a must. They go with Air Force by 18, Scott takes Wyoming in a mild upset by three.

West Texas State at New Mexico: The Lobos face another team about the caliber of their last opponent, New Mexico State. New Mexico won 61-21. They predict a 12-point Lobos win. Scott says the margin is 21.

Texas at San Diego State: The Miners are picked to finish last in the WAC, with the Aztecs right ahead of them. Both teams have come surprisingly close to highly-favored foes, UTEP losing 20-17 to Texas A&M and SDSU dropping an 18-16 decision to UCLA. This game may be pivotal — the loser will probably end up in the cellar. Although history says pick anyone and you're playing, both Troy and Scott pick the Miners by one.

Hawaii at Colorado State: In one of the biggest disappointments of the season, the Rainbow Warriors were placed in challenge by BYU for the WAC title this season, run out and lost to Cal State Fullerton last week in Honolulu. The Rams, meanwhile, stayed close to Mississippi State, losing 16-9. Neither of these teams is particularly easy to figure out. They forecast a one-point win for Hawaii, Scott goes with Colorado State by three.

Utah at Tennessee: Utah showed a lot of offense last week in Pullman, Wash., scoring 40 points against Washington State. Unfortunately, the Huskies showed no defense, giving up 42 points to the Cougars. In Tennessee's only game this season, the Volunteers defeated Washington State. They predict a Utah win by three, Scott forecasts the Cougars to win by 10.

Last week: Both Troy and Scott were right in one of 12 predictions last week. They picked the Boston College of Alabama, while Scott forecast Miami's fall to Michigan. In their other two upset picks — Troy took New Mexico State over New Mexico and Scott took Colorado State over Mississippi State — the editors came up on the wrong end of the scores. Hawaii's loss to Fullerton State didn't do much for either prognosticator.

Overall: After two weeks, Troy is 15-1 in 19, 1984 while Scott is just slightly ahead, picking 16 of 19 games correctly. US&T

Prep griddier suffers clot

ROCK SPRINGS, Wyo. (UPI) — A Rock Springs high school football player, apparently injured during a practice scrimmage, is in intensive care in a Utah hospital, but officials are hopeful the boy will fully recover from a blood clot on his brain.

Nathan Over, 17, is listed in critical condition at the University of Utah Medical Center, hospital spokesman Jim Johnson said. But Johnson said the youth's vital signs are strong.

"Right now, it's a waiting game, but there's a fairly good chance of him coming out of it fine," Johnson said.

Rock Springs coach Mike Lopprelle said Mike's father, Robert, told him a blood clot on his son's brain was surgically removed Thursday.

Lopprelle said the 170-pound senior starting linebacker and center, left the field during the scrimmage and complained to the team's trainer that he had a headache, Lopprelle said.

"There was nothing

you could point your finger at and say it was a big hit," Lopprelle said. Over, a 5-foot-11, 170-pound senior starting linebacker and center, left the field during the scrimmage and complained to the team's trainer that he had a headache, Lopprelle said.

Rugby cut to 16 weeks; play begins in February

By SKIP VANCE
Universe Staff Writer

Rugby fans waiting to see the BYU rugger play this fall will have to wait a little longer than usual. According to Coach John Senger, the Cougars have decided a 14-week fall season and a 16-week spring season too heavy a burden. As a result, the Cougars' season will open in February and continue for 16 weeks, plus the national tournament.

This time off will allow me to spend more time with my family on the weekends, and I will be able to work on my research," Senger said.

He will also find the time since he has been recently appointed chairman of the National Collegiate Committee for rugby. As such, he is responsible for the national playoffs, will do research for the status of college rugby and will be in charge of the rugby directory.

Although the team is not competing this fall, it should not weaken the Cougars going into the spring season. The competition is not that strong in the fall and will not affect the team.

"Competition in the fall is 'rag-bag' competition," Senger said.

Though the team is not competing this fall, it will continue to hold practice for new players. It will be a time for building the team. Practice will be every Tuesday and Wednesday at 3 p.m. and every Thursday at 4:30 p.m. at Hove Field.

According to Senger, assistant coach Lance Watson will be working with the young and over-performed players. This will give them the chance to develop properly before the season begins.

The team hopes to pick up where they left off at the end of last season. The Cougars ended their regular season with a 9-0 mark. The team went on to close out its season by finishing third in the Pacific Coast regional, losing to defending champieon U.C. Berkeley 15-10, after leading 6-3 at half-time.

This did not stop the Cougars as they came back in the next game to romp (Oregon State 24-14) in the consolation finale. This ended a great season for the Cougars, who finished 10-1 and earned a national rank of fifth, behind Harvard, University of Colorado, Long Beach State and U.C. Berkeley.

Not only did the Cougars get national attention, but so did Cougar standout Mark Ormsby, who was honored with the selection to the All-America team. Ormsby, playing right wing for the Cougars, scored 166 points in 14 games and set a team record.

"Ormsby, a New Zealander, has great versatility in that he can play three positions proficiently as well as being a very good place kicker," Senger said.

"Rugby is not a very big sport here so it was a great achievement," Ormsby said of his All-America selection.

This year will be Ormsby's last season with the Cougars, and he plans to use the time off this fall to get into shape. Ormsby was at one time a sprinter, and his goal this fall, he said, is to get back in that condition so that he will have all the speed possible for the coming spring.

Among his achievements last year were the invitation by the U.S. rugby team to play against Canada. Ormsby was also invited to tour with the team from New Zealand.

"THE WAVE" has been used for centuries in hundreds of historical settings. In an attempt to involve a mass audience, Noah used "THE WAVE." They were awestruck in admiration. The Israelis modified "THE WAVE." It is crossing the Red Sea. Once again it's a time to make history. This Saturday "THE WAVE" rolls into Cougar Stadium. Starting from the southwest corner we want "THE WAVE" to roll north around the stadium. Cosmo will signal the start, then let it roll. As the person next to you stands, you stand, scream and wave, then all down—"THE WAVE."

Positions announced for Continuing Ed

Several changes have been made in administrative positions in BYU's Division of Continuing Education.

Dr. Richard C. Eddy will fill a newly created assistant dean position, according to Dean William R. Siddons.

Eddy was formerly director of Independent Study. His position will be filled by Dr. Ralph A. Rowley, the former assistant director of Independent Study.

Kenneth D. Lindquist will take over the position of chairman of communications. He will replace Duane E. Hatt, who will become director of production for the Division's Academy of Telelearning.

As assistant dean, Eddy will supervise activities of the LDS Church Educational System (CES). These activities include Education Week, the Department of Independent Study and the BYU centers in Salt Lake City, Ogden, Los Angeles and Reynolds, Idaho.

Eddy holds a doctorate degree from the University of Southern California and was a supervisor of CES programs at the BYU California Center. He came to BYU in 1973.

Rowley came to BYU in 1984 as college coordinator in the Department of Colleges and Workshops. He received a doctorate in history from the University of New Mexico and has written four books in the war in Southeast Asia.

Hatt was a professional maintenance for 16 years, a member of "The Three D's" musical comedy group, and recorded for Capitol Records. He holds a master's degree in communication from BYU.

Lindquist, who also teaches graphic design classes at BYU, started work with CES and CES Workshops in 1977. He recently received a master's degree in public administration from BYU.

Fugitive surrenders after 9-year chase

Faces sentencing on riot and assault

RAPID CITY, S.D. (UPI)—Fugitive Indian leader Dennis Banks, declaring he was "glad to be home," surrendered Thursday against the advice of his attorneys to face sentencing on a 9-year-old riot and assault conviction.

Pennings County Circuit Judge Marshall Young denied a request for bond.

"Years ago you gave me your solemn promise to appear and didn't," said Young, who presided over the 1975 trial at which Banks was found guilty on charges stemming from a 1978 demonstration at the Custer County Courthouse.

"I never set bond for anyone who promised to appear and didn't," said Young.

Young did grant Banks' request to be held at the Pennington County Jail until an Oct. 8 sentencing appearance.

Banks, who fled South Dakota in 1978, was taken into custody in handcuffs after speaking with reporters for a few minutes at the Rapid City airport.

"It's really glad to be home," he said.

Banks was accompanied by his wife, his three daughters and son, and three attorneys.

Banks, 63, a Chippewa Indian from Leech Lake, Minn., arrived by car about 12:16 p.m. (EDT), ending an odyssey that took him from South Dakota to California to the Onondaga Indian Reservation near Syracuse, N.Y.

Banks was flanked by attorneys Joe Heath, Bruce Ellison and William Kuebler, who said he first advised Banks not to surrender because of the possible danger to his life. He has a maximum 16 years in prison.

Although Banks' troubles stemmed from the Custer County Courthouse riot, it was the American Indian Movement's takeover and subsequent 11-day occupation of Wounded Knee, S.D., three weeks later that catapulted him into the national spotlight.

He was indicted in Oregon on charges of federal firearms violations. But an appeals court recently upheld the dismissal of the Oregon charges, citing speedy trial guarantees.

Bank found sanctuary for eight years in California under the protection of former Gov. Jerry Brown, who refused South Dakota's extradition requests. He fled to upstate New York in January of 1983 when California Gov. George Deukmejian took office and indicated he would grant extradition.

During his stay in California, Banks was chairman of DeGaulle-dah-Quetacost University in Davis and taught courses at SDSU.

Music therapy is valid way to treat disease, Flea Market lecturer says

The history, modern development and recognition of musical therapy as a valid form of treatment were discussed in Thursday's Flea Market of Ideas. The lecture, co-sponsored by the Honors Program and ARBYU Academic Office, featured "Music and Medicine: A Partnership in History," a paper by Rosalind B. Pratt, an associate professor of music.

Samuel O. Pratt, filling in for his wife, read the paper and answered questions.

Ancient Greeks espoused the idea that health is a harmony and could be affected by music, said Mrs. Pratt. Numerous philosophers and musicians have, throughout history, noted the effects of music on pulse, sleep and mood.

Pratt's paper focused briefly on the human organism's synchronous response to musical vibrations. She quoted Beethoven, who said "the pulsing vibrations of disease could be replaced with the pleasant ones of music."

Pratt said Alzheimer used music to reach severely disturbed patients, believing that music bypassed the central nervous system to stimulate the thalamus — what he called "the seat of emotions".

Pratt said musical therapy is practiced in doctors' and dentists' waiting rooms to produce a calming, pacifying effect.

Swim program seeks volunteers

By DANIEL BILLIN
Universe Staff Writer

Adapted Aquatics needs to at least triple its current roster of 30 volunteers to effectively run programs scheduled to begin next Tuesday. Jim Murphy, executive director of the Utah Special Olympics and director of Adapted Aquatics, urged each of the volunteers at Thursday's orientation meeting to recruit three or four friends in time for the arrival of 55 handicapped swimmers next week.

Adapted Aquatics, a program for mentally and physically handicapped swimmers, is designed to teach practical and social skills. ASBYU co-sponsors Adapted Aquatics through the Student Community Services Office.

The swim program meets every Tuesday and Thursday at the Richards Building pool. Murphy said 50 participants from the Alpine School District are scheduled to arrive Tuesday.

Friday's participants, from the Oquirrh and BYU Demonstration schools, will number 100. An equal number of volunteers is needed each day to meet the program's goal of working one-on-one with the swimmers, according to Murphy.

Among program objectives listed in a hand-out given to volunteers are teaching and improving swimming skills, improving physical condition and skills and providing handicapped individuals with an opportunity to experience success and have fun.

Murphy said no experience is necessary to volunteer. Certified Special Olympic swimming coaches will provide instruction and assist in the hands-on learning experience, he said.

The orientation presentation will be repeated Oct. 11 and 12 for all new volunteers, with a training session in October for those wishing to qualify as Special Olympics coaches, said Murphy.

Blake Zenger, ASBYU Student Community Services coordinator for the program, said Adapted Aquatics provides a good service opportunity for students with little spare time, since it requires only two hours a week.

Students can volunteer by contacting the Student Community Services Office on the fourth floor of the Wilkinson Center, or by going to the Richards Building pool at 11 a.m. on Tuesday or Thursday.

USDA picks Y professor as director

A BYU professor has been appointed and is serving as Deputy Director and Director of Learning and Training Services of the Graduate School of the U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA).

Dr. Dee W. Henderson, a professor of public management and health administration in the BYU School of Management, has been serving in San Washington, D.C., appointment since Sept. 1. "It is a sign of a great university when its faculty are attractive to other universities and organizations," said Dr. Lennis M. Radtson, director of the Institute of Public Management and Health Administration at BYU.

This is an extraordinary opportunity for Dr. Henderson and is one he is well qualified for," Radtson said. "He will oversee a significant training and management development program for federal administrators."

Henderson will be taking two years of professional development leave from the BYU School of Management to fill the Washington, D.C., appointment. The graduate school of the USDA, where Henderson serves, is a non-profit school for continuing education.

Henderson served at the graduate school of the USDA from 1984 to 1986 before joining the BYU faculty. He served as the director of the Center for Modern Learning Technology, the forerunner to the USDA's Individual Learning Center. Henderson also filled positions as assistant and then head of Special Programs before serving as assistant director for the graduate school.

Henderson has authored numerous management publications, and holds a master's degree in public administration and education from BYU and a doctoral degree in government and public administration from American University.

Seniority policy pushes worker from job twice

PEORIA, Ill. (UPI) — Lewy Schultz said Thursday, "everything" was falling into place when Caterpillar Tractor Co. called him back to a job but now "my whole world" is falling apart.

Schultz moved his wife and four children back from Arizona to resume his job as a welder's helper at Caterpillar.

On his first day back on the job at the heavy equipment manufacturer's Moline plant, the 55-year-old Vietnam veteran and 10-year Caterpillar employee was bumped from his $12.24 an hour job by a welder with more seniority.

Schultz union, the United Auto Workers, contends Caterpillar is guilty of collusion. Caterpillar responds that the union rule — last hired, first fired — is responsible.

Schultz was one of more than a dozen laid-off workers who returned in other states and were recalled erroneously this year, said UAW local president Tony Green.

Schultz said, "I can't say there's no bitterness. It's there. I don't like it. I'm not that bitter that I wouldn't take my job back."

Schultz said that after he was laid off in September 1982 and lost his home, car and furniture, the family tried to assume a new life in Provo. He took a job as a $4.50 an hour school custodian and his wife, Bonnie, worked as a grocery cashier.

Caterpillar informed him last month that he had 10 days to accept his old job back.

Y personnel gets new V.P.

Warren R. Nielsen has been appointed as a new assistant vice president of personnel at BYU. He will be replacing Keith Duffin, who served in that position for the last 31 years.

Nielsen attended the University of Utah, taking a two-year break from school in 1968-69 to serve a mission in the Western United States for The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

Nielsen returned to his studies at the U. of U. after his mission and graduated in 1962. He then went to the University of Illinois where he obtained his master's degree in industrial relations.

He was hired by Ford Motor Co. in Detroit and remained there for six years. During those years, Ford appointed him manager of personnel and organizational development.

Nielsen left Ford in 1968 when he accepted a job as internal consultant at the University of Illinois.
